The following sections walk you through the steps of creating a simple graphic.

Dreams and memories PhotoShop's most basic object is a layer. A layer can have one or many objects on it and can even be one of your graphics. As shown in Figure 2-1, it's surrounded by an image selection, which is the boundary for what we're going to draw. Figure 2-1: Simply click to create a new layer and place the image you want in its upper-left corner. As with any other layer, you can resize it, create a group, group it with another layer, and deselect it to make sure it stays on that layer. When you're finished, you can use the Layers panel, as shown in Figure 2-2, to go back to the layers palette, as well as make sure the layer is still selected. Figure 2-2: The Layers palette, shown here in Figure 2-2, is where you can review the layers you've created, delete them, and change the order. You can also create new layers as you do so. In this example, we want to create two more layers, so select the two uppermost layers, as shown in Figure 2-3. Figure 2-3: You can create new layers when you use the new layer, as in the image in Figure 2-3. Open your file in Photoshop, or go to the Window menu and choose Photoshop from the menu and choose Open File. Open File is also located at the top of your Photoshop workspace. Click the file in the document window to bring up the Open dialog and open the file for editing. Figure 2-4 shows the small graphics with a regular file extension. Because the document is saved in a raster format, your file must be saved as a raster image. You can save as a JPEG or TIFF, but for the purposes of this book, we'll create a PNG file (a file format for graphics). Figure 2-4: Bring your image into Photoshop for processing. Drawing your images With

Q: Can the Minor Illusion spell put me out of an already cast spell? The Minor Illusion spell states that the illusion ends if it is cast on the same creature that cast the spell that caused the illusion to be created. What if I cast it on a creature that already cast a spell on me? Does it end the spell that put me in that position, or is it still in effect? A: It does stop the spell that put you in the position. The description of Minor Illusion states: The spell creates a sensory copy of an object or a sound. You choose the target you wish to copy from among those within range. The image appears to be real to the target, and the subject of the illusion, though he or she is oblivious of its magical nature. For example, if you cast Minor Illusion to create a copy of an orc in an enemy's dungeon, the target feels surrounded by orcs, hears orcs moving about, and smells orcs. Creatures subjected to the effect can hear, but not see, the illusion, though the illusion can make sounds that the target perceives to be coming from the real orc or other creatures. This spell cannot be used to show or do anything to the original object. As you already cast it, you are creating an exact copy of your vision in the mind of the creature. If the creature was just looking at an orc, they now view an exact image of the orc. They can now interact with this orc, even make its sounds, but they will not see anything other than the orc image. If you are casting to create an exact copy of a spell, you just need to select the spell to put your subject under. If the original spell that was casting the illusion was on yourself, and you were casting a spell that created an illusion of the original spell that created the illusion, then you are out of luck. You cannot just cast an exact copy of the original effect on yourself.

Q: Yii Data Model to reduce redundancy in code I am using CActiveDataProvider which seems good, but it's getting really repetitive as I have a lot of fields in my model... is there any way to make this easier? The current DataModel class works great because only the specific model fields that I want to display in a view are in it. But it gets really repetitive if I have more than one model that's associated with that model because I have to call all the same fields

Q: What's the difference between v3.x and v4.x React-router? We have been trying to upgrade from using React-router v3.x to v4.x. The problem we are having is that we have a lot of components that are using the exact same names for the state and functions. I understand that v4.x makes use of global constants instead of just constants which we have to define as variables in our component. This is correct, however the problem is that some components we have cannot be updated because we need to refactor everything, the entire component has to be rewritten from scratch. I think this is not a good approach to take as we could have a good chunk of code that is correct that would be better off being maintained. In the v3.x documentation I read that v4.x has a breaking change so you need to prefix them with the version number so it would appear as: `Home` which is the same as `Home` If I use this I will get an error that says the href is invalid. The documentation says there is a way to do it, but I cannot find it. Can anyone tell me what would be the best way to fix this? We already know that we will need to rewrite the components from scratch, are we supposed to try to keep all the old state and functions of v3 and then rewrite them to work with v4.x? A: The documentation says there is a way to do it, but I cannot find it I'm not sure what exactly you are looking for here, but you can do something like this: `function Link({ to, activeClassName, activeColor, ...props }) { return {to} ; }` Or if you feel you don't want to add a class, use this: `function Link({ to, activeClassName, activeColor, ...props }) { return {to} ; }`
