I want to access and pass values through iphone application in.h files. Please help me A: You cannot access the data from one class to another, unless you are doing a messaging of some sort. You would need to create a method in your first class that the second class calls. A: All methods that are called to change the state of the application have to be called from the AppDelegate.m file. Otherwise, methods are not guaranteed to be called in a predictable order. If you have some initialization code that needs to be run before any controllers or view controllers are created, that code must also be run from the AppDelegate. The best place for that code is in the -(void)didFinishLaunchingWithOptions: method. A: Use property for that.. .h @interface MyObject : NSObject { int myInt; NSString *myString; bool isLogic; } @property(nonatomic, assign) int myInt;
