Efficacy of toad venom as a provocation test in the diagnosis of contact urticaria: a randomized study. Several contact allergens, including venom from the African toad (Bufo marinus), have been shown to be a cause of contact urticaria (CU), but there is controversy about their diagnostic efficacy. To establish the sensitivity and specificity of the newly proposed Western Code for the diagnosis of CU. Fifty-four consecutive patients with CU and 54 with atopic dermatitis (AD) or healthy controls were included. The presence of CU was confirmed by positive prick test to the contact sensitizer and later confirmed by positive patch test to the culprit allergen. All subjects were tested with a standard battery of seven putative contact allergens. Venom from the African toad produced a reaction in 22/54 patients with CU and 16/54 with AD. Sensitivity and specificity were 86% and 80%, respectively. In the control population, positive reactions were observed in 5/54 patients and 1/54 controls, respectively. A positive reaction to African toad venom was produced in 17/24 (71%) of the patients with confirmed CU, 20/25 (80%) with positive patch test to the contact sensitizer and 20/25 (80%) with positive patch test to the culprit allergen. A positive reaction was observed in 8/12 (67%) of the patients with contact urticaria positive for the contact sensitizer. Venom from the African toad appears to be a useful tool for the confirmation of CU. It may be used in place of the previously employed standard battery of allergens.Q: How to populate a list or array with elements of a string in java I'm trying to learn Java, so I am following a book. Dr Isobel White, a consultant in clinical neurophysiology at the John Radcliffe Hospital in Oxford, is developing a test to be used by paediatricians to identify infants who are at risk of developing autism. She spoke to the Oxford Times to outline her early findings and future plans for a test for pregnant women. The time for diagnosis of autism in children – around the age of two – has to be kept to a minimum She said: "Typically, a child's brain will develop and mature according to its environment – the genes that are there and the experiences that they have. "You're not born thinking that when you get teased by a friend that you shouldn't like it – we all learn that somehow. You learn to tolerate that at some point in your life. "This research suggests that the brain has not really stopped learning and doesn't know how to cope with these experiences. "When the brain is
