Effects of methionine or glycine supplementation on the growth and contents of lysine, cysteine, methionine, and tryptophan in tea and alfalfa. Two separate experiments were conducted to evaluate the effects of supplementation with methionine and glycine on the growth and metabolism of plants. In the first, methionine (8.2 g/kg) and glycine (9.2 g/kg) were given to soil-grown seedlings of two cultivars of tea (Camellia sinensis L.). Growth was enhanced by methionine but not glycine. In the second, leaves from seedlings of alfalfa (Medicago sativa L.) were tested with varying amounts of supplemental glycine. Supplementation with glycine up to 3.6 g/kg significantly increased leaf nitrogen, with the specific activity of glutamic acid synthetase activity also increasing. It is suggested that supplemental amino acids may improve plant growth in two ways: first, by increasing protein and amino acid content, and second, by acting directly on amino acid synthetic processes.bib18]. In the present study, we did not observe any clinical side effects in the patients who received hypoallergenic drug containing hQS-21. However, while the dosages used in this study were lower than the doses given in other studies ([@bib0045]), they were still higher than the dose needed to induce immune activation. We investigated the feasibility of delivering hQS-21 to the brain and *in vitro* toxicity of the drug. hQS-21 was entrapped in liposomes which did not affect its activity. The hQS-21 liposomal nanoparticle was able to cross the blood brain barrier *in vivo*. This finding is consistent with the results of previous studies on other QS-21-based formulations. In these studies, they were able to cross the blood brain barrier through intranasal, intravenous and intracerebral routes ([@bib0040], [@bib0045]). The plasma half-life of liposome-entrapped QS-21 was around 1.8 days after a single intravenous injection. There is no evidence of toxicity of the liposome-entrapped QS-21 formulation in any of the previous studies and our results. However, the low dose used in our study may not induce immune activation. Interestingly, we
