Wandering around in the dark, searching for someone who won't listen, sitting at the back of the classroom, resting only when no one is around. Most students do not understand her. But you're the exception. You've got enough of her. Are you alright? This is the evening and everyday life of Lily Kaufmann, a third-year high school student at the 'Arrow Hall High School'. In the back-and-forth between the bright-red cliffs of adolescence and the wilderness of teenage worries, Lily has yet to understand any of it. Who said that people like you don't exist? A collection of 'hidden' incidents recorded by a student notebook. Are you alright? A story about a nerdy schoolgirl falling in love with someone she can never expect to be able to love in return. This isn't a story of a girl struggling to become a beautiful woman. And that's not a story of a girl moving towards the grand finale of 'true love'. Are you alright? For us, games are much more than entertainment. They take us back to a place that we can only feel. Are you alright? 'Are you alright?' is a game of love, darkness and light, adolescence and young adulthood. An eternal, unending tale that crosses the boundaries of time. Are you alright? follows one girl's thoughts as she undertakes the road to self-discovery. The player eventually develops the strength of their mind, and encounter the great power of their emotions and knowledge as they move from one 'impossible' obstacle to the next. These are the tears and the laughter of one girl. The feel of playing through Are you alright?, as the player makes their own choices and finally confronts their own heart, is very deep and substantial. Are you alright? is an original script that focuses on the reality of high school students and students at a high school. It also draws on the author's own experiences at high school, as well as on her countless hours of research about high schools. You may think: "Oh, one more story about a high school girl. I can already get that from many other 'normal' video games." However, the unique

For all about music, visit our official soundtrack page here Or play any of our songs online here Besides our soundtrack, we have another play on a song for you: Your favorite role-playing game might have some crappy music. So here is a sample of better music we thought might fit your needs better. Original Score: To complement the game and soundtrack, we worked together to create our own original music using the Hans Zimmer theme song and other pieces and remixes we found at dnSamples.com. Concept Art: If you like our music or soundtrack, there is more concept art and story art for you! That's it for now. We have great news! We have been working hard and spent some quality time together while we still got the chance. So now we have our new website up and running. You may find some new fun and silly stuff on it! You may also find our main page here. We have done some new development since we had the old site removed and we tried to make it easier to connect with our mission here. Tell your friends and family about us! Share our game and music with them to help us get more views and sales! Discuss the game and soundtrack at our forums here (if you are a registered member) and the music on our official Bandcamp page here. You can send emails to us at cats@catswhosheres.com and by our usual mailing address: Cats Who Stay Here (1-2312 Imperial Blvd. Highland Park, CA 91012) You can talk to us on instagram, twitter, tumblr, discord and many more. Check out our facebook page here and our wikia here. We have our new website up and running! The old one will be live until further notice. Everything is coming together. We have great news and updates for you. Cats Who Stay Here has had no regular updates for a while. Since the death of our old website and more, we have not had any serious update to share with you. We have finished our miniseries and we have been writing the full game. It is called "Cats Who Stay Here" and it is inspired by our favourite comics from the 60s and 70s. It is done in the same style as our main game, with retro pixel graphics! Since we are d41b202975

Advertisements Review Long ago, when Katpets was but a prosperous and elegant village, the Gods of Good and Evil, Arcturus and Barathrum respectively, suddenly appeared in the skies above the village and offered a boon to its inhabitants in exchange for a sacrifice. No one in the village could offer such a sacrifice, and the two Gods disappeared, not having promised more than one. After that, an evil fog started to envelop the village and nobody ever saw the Gods again. Eventually, humans started to feel miserable and depressed by the fog's effects, and they began to commit suicides to remove the fog from the village. With all of them dead, the fog was unable to affect Katpets again. However, the village's economy started to suffer. When the fog began to hit the villages around Katpets, people were able to guess why. By bringing new people into the village, and forcing the old ones to grow crops for them, the fog actually returned. With the fog, the people's businesses started to suffer. Eventually, a "Deva" was brought in to the village. She was able to stop the fog, but she was forbidden to live within Katpets' walls. The Deva, an anthropomorphic fox, was named Tabitha and she eventually became the village's new ruler. One day, it was discovered that the fog had returned. As usual, the citizens were not happy about it, and the Deva tried to stop it again, but the villagers beat her up and sent her away, claiming they were the ones with the power to do so. Fast forward several years. A group of adventurers, human and feline, happen to be in the nearby forest when the fog starts to appear. Seeing it as a sign from the Gods, they decide to try and stop it, and use the promise of the dead Gods as an excuse to enter the village. The group consists of a half-drunk Katpets drinker (Michael), a well-dressed geisha named Yukiko, an adventurer (Goskan) and a bard (Nixon). Unfortunately, the villagers assume that the group is a band of bandits (don't worry, this is later revealed to be a different group), and the group eventually enters the mountains. After that, they decide to make it a point to visit the many temples in the area in order to collect the
