Nov 7, 2011 Singapore has just released the 2011 O-Level Physics syllabus which you can view online here. It's a huge job to fit in another two years worth of classes, so I'm prepared to do my review tonight. Thursday, January 20, 2011 Congratulations to our DSTAS team who just finished up with their Business Plan! We interviewed six students to learn about their concepts and ideas and then came to a conclusion that they'd be better off going their own way. I'm very proud of them. Wednesday, January 12, 2011 Firstly, I'm super pleased to announce that we've been accepted into the 2011 DSTAS competition! The theme of the competition is "Design for Sustainable Cities." It's not yet known how many teams are participating, but it's a big contest. We're the only team from Singapore, but we definitely plan to put up a good fight. Watch out for more information coming soon :) Q: Convert array to object in awk I have an array (split by,). I want to convert this array to an object (which can be set and read by another application), to perform different operations. I have tried to search for the answer, but didn't get exact answer. Is there any way to convert this array to object in awk script? A: Replace all occurrences of string $1 with array [$1]. awk -F ',' '{k=1;for(i=2;i

It is possible to use a computer to crack passwords and other codes, but it is also very easy for a computer to be hacked. So it is best to use a password that is easy for you to remember, but hard for others to guess. Here are some good tips to help you remember strong passwords: Make a list of important passwords. Next, write down each of the 20 most important passwords that you will use with your computer. You will be using each of these passwords several times a day, and you won't want to be without them. Write down the name of each of your computers and the company that produced it. This way, you will always know which computer or computer company is the right one to use if a problem occurs. Use a password that is easy to remember, but difficult for others to guess. A good password is one that begins with a letter of the alphabet, but doesn't end with one either. It should contain characters of all different types, and be of a minimum length.

Use a phrase instead of a name if you can. For example, instead of writing "my password" for your password, write "My password to access www.mywebpage.com is." If a hacker gains access to www.mywebpage.com, they will be able to see your password. Write down your password on a piece of paper, and keep it in a safe place. The best place is the bottom of your bedside table, or in the back of a cabinet.

Don't use the same password for every computer. If a hacker finds out your password, they may be able to gain access to other computers that use the same password. Make sure your passwords are different from your credit card numbers. This is the most common way your personal information is stolen by hackers. Use the first letter of your first and last name. For example, if your name is Betsy, write "BetsyS@mail.com" for your email address. Make your passwords a word, a phrase, or a short song. Some people do this by spelling out the full song lyric. If you don't want to read a song, you can use a phrase instead. For example, a hacker could guess the word "aardvark" and never know that it was actually a song that you wrote. Use a password that you will use for a long time. If you use the same password for a d0c515b9f4
