Somewhere in the middle of both, the reading season begins. Author Philippa Gregory's latest historical fiction novel, Unbound, is just such a book. Her latest novel is set in Edwardian London and its environs. It features the passions of four central characters, three of whom are a bit eccentric: Eppie, who likes to spend her days visiting graveyards; Betsy, who's a heroin addict; and Alfred, who isn't quite all there. The fourth character, then, is the principal object of romance, and even though the story is set in the time of Jane Austen, it has very little to do with the events in Austen's life. It also has very little to do with marriage; rather, it's about people in love with other people. While the people are not married, they do believe marriage to be a right, a source of joy and happiness, a peaceful, happy place where everyone lives together in the best of all possible worlds. That it should be so is a primary motivation for their behavior, but the novel also explores the broader social, social and religious factors influencing the lives of the characters. The d0c515b9f4
