It's harder to appreciate a concert made up entirely of songs by your favorite songwriter of all time when the guy who wrote said songs isn't there to perform them. This weekend, as a tribute to the incomparable Bob Dylan, Ray Wylie Hubbard rode to the rescue. More specifically, a rented ATV did. Hubbard's musical talent has been recognized by the public for quite a few years now, and last year's Sundown Saloon Bluegrass Fest was among the first to show his proficiency. This year he was in a similar capacity, both for the members of the Nashville Bluegrass Hall of Fame and bluegrass music in general, as Hubbard hosted the bi-annual All Country Bluegrass Music Festival, known as the Grotto with Musical Rock Moses. He stuck mostly to some of the tricks he was known for, like riffs that whirred up and back down the fretboard like a small tornado of sound, while twisting out the corner of his guitar. Tom Bohannon on bass and Morgan Gaines on banjo shared the stage with Hubbard, and playing with each other on stage created the perfect blend of grooving and into the divots. Gaines played parts of that fantastic Dave Alvin étude, Alder And Pine. Hubbard had already performed it at
