The effect of prenatal dexamethasone and cortisol treatment on the intrauterine development of the umbilical artery and placental surface area was studied on rabbits. After 1, 2, and 4 injections of dexamethasone, 20 rabbits were examined at intervals of 2 h and every 4 h from the 15th to the 21st day of gestation. Immediately after abortion an autopsy was done to measure the length of the umbilical cord and allometric placental weight. Another 20 rabbits were treated with a single injection of dexamethasone and 4 injections of 1.5 mg cortisol on the 15th, 16th, 17th, and 18th days of gestation. Two rabbits were killed at intervals of 2 h and every 4 h from the 17th to the 21st day of gestation. The umbilical cord length in the treated rabbits was significantly increased in comparison with the control. The intrauterine growth of the placenta was also altered in the treated rabbits; especially the placental surface was bigger than in the control rabbits. In the group treated with cortisol the pre-term delivery rate was increased and the fetuses survived for less time in comparison with the dexamethasone treated group. These findings suggest that prenatal dexamethasone treatment influences the intrauterine development and survival of the fetus and placenta and that cortisol is more harmful for the development of the fetus and placenta than dexamethasone.

The script reads in a file of all lines in which a string occurs and if that string is found, does something. The script returns 0 if no strings are found, -1 if no valid strings are found, 1 if valid strings are found and 0 if the file is empty. If something goes wrong during execution of the script I get an exception like:

C:/Documents/some_dir:/code.rb:3: undefined method `to_s' for nil:NilClass How do I catch this exception and return 0/1/0 based on that?

A: You should use the rescue clause in your code : begin # do sth rescue Exception => ex puts "my error" return 0 end You can define your own error message, but in most cases the default one is a good starting point. Mr. Paul, a Christian who has been ministering to the sick, is an occasional visitor at a hospital where he is employed as a pharmacist. He is a good, quiet, pleasant fellow. “Why,” I hear you ask, “should he be prevented from ministering to the sick?”

You may be surprised to hear that the hospital regulations prohibit the minister from coming into the hospital to minister in any way. As a Christian, the minister's first business is to minister to the spiritual side of his patients. They do not want him to help them spiritually, but for some reason they think he cannot minister to their spiritual needs and therefore would prefer he not come to see them. He is directed to the parsonage, and there to be held to a strict account by the medical superintendent. He may pray with them, he may read them the Scriptures, he may preach to them, but he cannot touch them. Mr. Paul continues to serve God faithfully, but does not come to the hospital any more. He cannot carry out God's purpose for his work, because he has been forbidden to do so. The rule says he must be absent from the hospital, if he touches them. The rule says he cannot touch them. So, we have people worshiping God and getting their ideas of religion and the Bible from an organization that is non-religious in all the truth of the Bible. That non-religious organization has set up rules which say that men who minister to the sick in the way God ordained to minister to His people may not be ministering to those people at all. This is an attempt to get God's people to violate God's law because they do not like God's law. Paul says, "He that is alone let him stand alone, and he that is not
