Copyright (c) 2014-2019, $Id: http: .Q: Is my tomato struggling to germinate, or has the growth rate just slowed? All of my tomato seeds are germinated, but the growth is somewhat slow. Some seedlings are pushing leaves through the dirt, but others are several inches behind, and it's not obvious which is which. Is this because the seedlings are struggling to push any further into the soil, or is it because I planted them late? A: Most likely because you didn't water them, or too early or too late. Are the plants growing fine? I'm guessing "nope" You can add more dirt and water, up to the top of the spout (water head) on the plant tray. Some new plants are more mature than others, and so need more time. Also, it's very normal for all of the seedlings to be "a little behind" when they are still small, and unable to send out true leaves. Once they start to push up, they will grow rapidly. A low-cost, portable, all metal air kerma-measurement system has been developed, constructed, and tested. The system utilizes a standard, National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST)-traceable ionization chamber (MPS-3/3) and the meter "Personal Measurement System" (PMS). The time history and energy spectrum of the system's ionizing radiation can be recorded. The inherent advantages of the system are its small size, light weight, and low cost. The reproducibility of the system was studied with a

A note on h.264 and AAC. AAC is a fine format as it is lossless audio and is typically perfectly mixed and mastered, but h.264 was chosen because it is a common format.
