For example: std::vector v(10); v.resize(60,0); // don't resize Later on i want to reallocate a bit more memory for another vector of the same type, so i'll have something like: std::vector v(50); v.resize(100,0); // don't resize Is there a smart way of doing this? A: No, there isn't. You need to either make versions of Assassin's Creed IV Black Flag. Its effect is the same as "Scent of the Assassin", which can be unlocked by Wreckage, it will give you a bit of vision of an enemy's movements and the option of being able to lock on to them.

As you can imagine, visiting a museum is one of the most relaxing ways to spend your free time. Whether it's a museum filled with ancient artifacts, art or history, or even one with furniture and decorative items, a visit to a museum will give you a better understanding of the history and traditions of a certain area. For one, you have to find a place that will allow you to create a whole new world or environment (examples being pre-made worlds in New Leaf, or the city of Amityville in the TV series), and then you have to draw an area with a map on it. In this map, you can draw your own environment, or you can use the pre-made maps, which are covered in the following article.

Here is some code:

private void save(object o) { decimal a = (decimal) o; cmd.Parameters.AddWithValue("@project_quantity", a.ToString()); cmd.ExecuteNonQuery(); MessageBox.Show("Project was saved."); }

The problem I am having is that it gives the error: System.FormatException: Input string was not in a correct format. I can't really pinpoint where the problem is, since all I do is convert the object to a string to add it to the database. So any ideas?

Thanks! A: If o is an int, decimal or other value that doesn't fit in a byte (like smallint), it will be promoted to a decimal. As this type is narrower, the maximum value is 2147483647. The exception is thrown. Use a string instead and the conversion will happen. private void save(object o) { var s = o as string; if (s != null) {
