Browning Enfield 7.62 The Browning Enfield 7.62 is a single-shot, selective-fire, semi-automatic, air-cooled piston-operated rifle developed and manufactured by the Argentine firearms manufacturer Browning. The Enfield 7.62 is chambered for the .308 Winchester cartridge and is fed from an integral straight-link or straight-pull bolt. The rotating barrel and bolt are made from steel and the barrel and piston are made of chrome-plated steel. The rifle is notable for its complete "semi-automatic" operation (high-pressure cartridge pushing it out) combined with the lock-on capability and shot precision of semi-automatic fire, though it does not use the normal recoil of a full-automatic, or fire very fast. The Enfield has the virtues of easy maintenance, ruggedness, and low cost of ownership. Various features have been included since its inception. The barrel shroud is optional; its role is to allow a more clear view of the action during aiming, but other aftermarket barrels are available without a shroud. In addition, the standard Enfield comes with an adjustable buttstock and magazine. History The rifle was developed in 1954 by the military arms company the "Amaccorda" S.A. de C.V. (Corporación Anónima Venezolana) in its factory El Valle del Yeso, located in the department of Corrientes province, in Argentina. The rifle was developed by Chief Armament engineer Luis Condorito under the direction of 2nd Lt. Reinaldo Ortega. The rifle is supplied by the Argentine Army with the serial number 30000–100000 and is later distributed to all the National Component of the Argentina Army and National Gendarmerie. It was also adopted by many countries, such as Bolivia, Portugal and Romania. Variants 7.62mm Enfield The basic model and the only one available in the U.S. market, the 7.62mm Enfield was the first true small-caliber arms (7.62×25mm) made in the Soviet Bloc, and it is its more powerful relative, the 7.62×54mm. It is chambered for the 7.62×25mm cartridge. The Enfield can be found in different variants: Enfield MK-1/M/MS (1954

What's New in the Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.0.1)?

Q: Switch statement with conditions and values? I'm writing a switch statement for it to see if the user input is equal to a value in a string array. If it is equal, do something, if not, do something else. Right now I have: switch (Integer.parseInt(args[0]) > 20) { case 1: // do this break; case 2: // do that break; case 3: // do this break; case 4: // do this break; case 5: // do that break; case 6: // do that break; default: // todo break; } It's not working. How can I do this? A: Your solution is just fine (and simpler). But if you want it as a function, just use switch-case: public void myMethod(int i) { switch(i) { case 1: //do this; break; case 2: //do that; break; case 3: //do this; break;
