A customer who requires assistance to locate a particular product would prefer to be able to see the product to verify that the product is the one he wishes to purchase. Conventional store displays display the product in a manner which is easily seen by a customer, generally mounting the product on a horizontal display rail. It is difficult to accomplish such an arrangement with a kiosk since the presence of a keyboard makes it difficult to display the product in such a manner. As a result, the kiosks are limited in their usefulness for displaying many of
