Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an automotive steering column, and more particularly to an automotive steering column, which is securely fixed to the cabin. 2. Description of the Prior Art Automotive steering columns generally have the problem of insufficient rigidity in a range of 8.5 to 11.5 degrees in which vertical swinging of a steering wheel is inhibited. In order to overcome this problem, there has been proposed an automotive steering column which is mounted on the cabin of the vehicle so that its forward end is pivoted to the cabin, thus preventing vertical swinging of the steering wheel caused by buffering of the driving force transmitted to the steering wheel.
