Purchase Word Converter Leave a CommentThis is usually the first question I get asked about patient's education and this info is most commonly found on the website of a hospital, clinic, or doctors office. There are a couple of ways to respond to this question. The first way is that patients education is a mechanism for education as well as it is a mechanism for the greater purpose of obtaining optimal care. Usually, patients are educated by the physicians and nurse practitioners, however, the protocol for patient education is generally more comprehensive on medical services by hospital staff. I remember a comment that I heard from a former hospital medical director several years ago; "Don't see the patient until they need to see you." Meaning the patient's education was a function of the patient's need to see you. That seemed to be a mindset for the medical clinic as well. Another way to address this question is to state that the outcomes of education are not always accurate when we evaluate it. In fact, there is an old saying that states, "We don't measure quality by quality, we measure quality by the cost of treating patients." In most cases, patients education is an ongoing measure as to improve patients care, but it also appears that a lot of the effort expended into patient education is to appease the insurance companies, and generally, that is the reason to develop patient education programs.
