The plans, which will require approval by Theresa May's Cabinet, would mean EU citizens with convictions for crimes including rape, manslaughter, child abuse and violent sex attacks would not be allowed to enter the UK. 6 They want to stop EU citizens who have committed 'grossly negligent' crimes from entering Britain. Pictured, women in protective clothing under railings at the Old Bailey Credit: Rex Features 6 A new law is being proposed which would allow the UK Government to stop EU citizens who have committed a crime such as rape, manslaughter, child abuse, domestic violence and other violent sex attacks. Pictured, a view of the entrance to the Old Bailey in London It comes after 160,000 Bulgarians and Romanians were given limited access to public housing in the UK after they came here as part of the 2014 Immigration Act. But the current rules say European criminals who are convicted will be given a period to appeal before deportation. Damning statistics released by the Home Office found there were 5,000 instances of "criminal behaviour" between 2014 and 2016 where EU citizens were excluded from entering the UK.
