How can I detect subdomains in the same way the standard client side validation is done for email address or the other fields? A: You can't, per se. If you consider email addresses to be a special case (as you may for example in an internal system) you should use custom validation rules in order to verify this: function validateField(field) { if (field == undefined) { // No field to validate! return false; } var isValid = true; // General field validation if (! email_address(field)) { isValid = false; } // Custom validation return isValid; } And then in your client side form-validation script: var onSubmit = function(form) { var errors = 0; var success = 0; // Loop through all the fields for (var i = 0, i_l = form.length; i ," Governor Chris Christie proclaimed when he signed the budget bill into law. An investigation on biodegradation of toluene and other organic solvents was carried out in a reactor containing ARS, O2 and petroleum oil sludge (POS). The biodegradation of toluene was more effective by using only POS than the other two components in the reactor. The optimal conditions of gas type and gas ratio were determined as 1% ARS and 40% O2, respectively. The decay rates of toluene, benzene, xylene and ethylbenzene were higher than 99% for a period of 42 days. The ozone deactivation rate was estimated to be more than 99% under the optimal conditions. The results showed that the biodegradation of toluene by POS was carried out by a synergistic action of O2, ARS and POS, in which the breakdown of organic solvents through the reactions of heterogeneous reaction between organic solvents and the mineral surfaces, followed by the aerobic biodegradation of the mineral surfaces and the final mineralization of organic compounds.Determination of cytosine methylation in rat liver using high-performance liquid chromatography. A procedure is described for the determination of cytosine methylation in rat liver using high-performance liquid chromatography. The method involves extraction of DNA and purification of cytosine, deoxycytidine, and deoxyuridine using Sephadex LH-20 chromatography. The percentage of cytosine methylation is determined by measuring the ratio of the amounts of cytosine to deoxycytidine in the purified DNA.1 of 1 2 of 1 Canada is a nation of proud nonconformists, and this trait has been in full display at the Vancouver Marathon.
