A: You should probably avoid this as the code isn't guaranteed to work. Fortunately, there's a simple answer. You can just pass `$html` to `$this->get_code()`. That will ensure it escapes the HTML, which will return valid PHP. This does invalidate the previous requirement, but honestly you're probably not passing in an HTML string anyway... Public participation in county governance has been part of the fabric of life in St. Louis County for more than 30 years. The county's charter allows for regular public participation in governance by a county commission, which is a mix of political appointees and elected county officials. However, the charter limits the extent of public participation at budget hearings. In an ideal world, all of those involved in government at all levels would be committed to the principle that the people have a God-given right to rule over their government. When a government is not accountable to the people, it is a government without the consent of the governed. But even if that ideal is not a realistic aspiration, it is important that we strive to operate our government in a way that allows all of its constituents to have their voice heard and a real stake in the future of the county. With that in mind, the St. Louis County Council recently announced that it would be increasing its budget oversight hearings to include a public forum that would involve a Q&A, testimony from members of the public and a presentation by county staff. Not all who wish to speak at a public forum have the wherewithal to travel to other cities to make their case. But in St. Louis County, local government is, by its nature, a local issue, and we believe it is incumbent upon the government that is closest to the people to explain its actions and justify its spending to the public. The vast majority of decisions made by government are made in part because of the taxpayer's revenue. I believe all of our constituents should have that right to question the decision makers. In fairness, the County Council has been dragging its feet on holding these hearings. The recent budget hearings we held were the first in about three years. The last time we conducted a public forum was in 2010, when we held a few budget hearings. The budget that was under consideration at that time was balanced, and our emphasis was on reviewing the future budget projections to make sure that we are making the best choices to address the finances of the county while protecting the vital

He has had particular interests in thinking about historical developments through the lens of social systems and networks. He is especially noted for introducing the concept of "radical science" to the North American physics community, leading to a resurgence of interest in radical science. Along with Jack W. Szostak, he is one of the founders of the scientific journal Radical Science. References External links Thomas S. Some individuals are repeatedly susceptible to travel-related diarrhea. Seasonality, water and food sources, geographic and health transition factors and predisposing enteric pathogen infections may influence susceptibility. In addition, host characteristics may contribute to risk of disease. This review considers the evidence that two factors, probiotic use and delayed rehydration, may contribute to the risk of diarrhea. The evidence on host susceptibility factors is less convincing. Several lines of evidence support consideration of water and food sources in the prevention of diarrhea. Ethnic food associations with disease risk are described. The pathophysiology of persistent diarrhea is reviewed, and the
