Period Â« XXVIIIÂ .Q: WPF use Style on a.NET UserControl I'm working on a very simple WPF project. I have a MainWindow.xaml with a TabControl and a UserControl inside: The user control contains a Grid, and a few labels and buttons: Lorem ipsum Welcome I would like to use a style to style the text of the labels, and the background color of the button. Is there a way to avoid creating a.xaml file for the UserControl? In other words, do something like this:

That's why I'm not surprised that a country that is known for its toll roads and highways would have such stupid laws about this. ~~~ RobGR I would hope that almost every HN reader is aware that the UK does have a fast and reliable public transport system, and that unlike the US where many people drive everywhere they would be just as happy driving to/from the nearest train station as driving all the way to a large city, but that theoretically the cost of a return bus ride is not less than that of a drive alone. I would hope that most of the UK readers here are equally aware of the fact that our scientific knowledge indicates that there is a strong 6d1f23a050
